APHA-SA members represent a broad spectrum of next generation working professionals who are studying in diverse disciplines including health promotion and education, environmental and occupational health, maternal and child health, epidemiology, biostatistics, health behavior, social work, nutrition and dietetics, international health, health administration, and public health nursing. These student members will go on to be employed in various settings including worksites, hospitals, managed care organizations, schools, universities and colleges, voluntary organizations, federal/state/local health departments, and international organizations.
